

which the theatrical manugers of Salt Lake fling to the breeze for the coming weekvide the announcements on this ndicate that the town will have ample fare from which to make its choice of a toothsome theatrical feast, It is seldom, indeed that the same week brings us so many notable events as the appearance of Sousa, George M. Cohan and the advent of a new Shubert house. Add to these the continued popularity of the Orpheum, the appearance of a new leading man at the Grand, a play by Rex Beach at the Colonial, and the coming of an oldtime favorite like Milton Nobles at the Bungalow-and the average theater goer may well be pardoned if he confesses to a feeling of bewilderment as to where he ought to bestow his patron-

It is seven years or over since George M. Cohan was last seen in Salt Lake. During that time he has been turning out musical plays at a fast and furious rate, and we have had such successes of his as "Little Johnny Jones," "George Washington, Jr.," "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," etc., but all with someone else than Cohan in the leading part. Now he comes at the head of his famous family, which includes himself, his wife, his sister, and his father, with a dozen other principals in the cast, and a big chorus of girls to fill in the chinks.

Cohan's new play is entitled "The Yankee Prince," and it has had strong success in New York. There are 18 song numbers in the play and the story is along the lively American lines that his plays usually follow. It can be said for them they are usually full of honsense, but best of all, they are clean. During that time he has been turning clean.

Several good song numbers are to be heard in "The Yankee Prince." The ones that will undoubtedly become instantly popular are: "Showing the Yankee London Town," "I'm to Marry a Nobleman," "Villains in the Play," "Come on Down Town," Yankee Doodle for You," "The A B C's of the U. 8. A.," "I Fay, Flo," "M-O-N-E-Y," and "Think it Over Carefully,"

The complete cast will include George M. Cohan, Lila Rhodes, Helen F. Cohan, Jerry J. Cohan, Tom Lewis, P. B. Pratt, Sam J. Ryan, Frank Hollins, Robert Emmett Lennon, Donald Crisp, J. Jiequel Lance, William Leyle, Lola Hoffman, and Mildred Elaine.

Seats for Mr. Cohan's engagement will be placed on sale Tuesday.

Since then she has had an extended engagement abroad, dur-ing which she duplicated her American successes in London and Paris. Her offering is a series of character studies, some of which are serious, but nearly all of which have a humorous turn. Messrs. Rover, Emerson, Bates and Reed, billed as "The Big City Quartet," promise a distinct treat to music lovers. The Grand company which includes all of the Willard Mack players except Mack himself, with the addition of the mew leading man, Walter McCullough, has been hard at work all the week on the play of "The Great Divide," in which the company reappears next week. This is said to be the first stock production of this play west of the Mississippi.

Everyone remembers the deep impression left by Henry Miller in this drama, and Blanche Douglas's appearance in the part of the New England girl who was forced into the terrible marriage with the renegade cowboy, will be especially interesting.

What an irreparable loss might have been inflicted upon the drama had the bullet of the offended critic who challeged Henri Bernstein to a duel gone to its mark! Measured by popularity, he is already the most successful living dramatist, and he is but a young man. Charles Frohman has three companies now on the road playing his great play "The Thief," and one at The Criterion in New York playing the new drama: "Israel," with James K. Hackett in "Samson."

The truth is out. Although Brandon Tynan, the author-actor, is given the credit of having written "The Passion Flower" for Nazimova, it is said on good authority that Nazimova herself is responsible for much of the story. Mr. Tynan, according to report, has made an excellent tailor. Mme. Nazimova selected the pattern, and together she and Mr. Tynan did the weaving. Likewise Nazimova largely designated the model and cut. Mr. Tynan removing the basting threads of Russian verbs and overprodigious metaphors.

Rex Beach, who is just now is one of the most popular of all American writers, was made famous by writing the exciting story from which "The Spoilers" is dramatized.

The play was first produced in New York, where it created nothing short of a sensation, then it went to Chicago, where it had another long successful run. Manager Frohman, whose ability to read the wants of the theater going public is unquestioned, arranged with the western managers a send "The Spoilers" direct to Seattle where it had a phenomenal run, in fact "The Spoilers" was the first play ever presented on a Seattle stage that enjoyed a two weeks' run to capacity business.

The success of "The Spoilers" has business.

The success of "The Spoilers" has not been due to the exertions of any of our great actors but the world wide interest shown in this play, is due to the boldness of its story its Alaskan setting, its strong realism and because it depicts the unconquerable spirit of the typical American.

The last act shows a beautiful snow scene in a canyon in the far north. The mallomutes used in this scene are claimed to be the famous "huskies" which drew the mail from Dawson to the most northern point of civilization.

What old timer does not remember Müton Nobles, "The Phoenix" and "The villain still pursued her?" The name of Nobles is associated with the oldest and best traditions of local stage history. In 1871, then a boy of 20, he played with the famous stock company at the Salt Lake theater. It was, as he has often written, his first "star" engagement. He was en route cast from San Francisco, and opened in the famous old "Time Works Wonders." Then he played Snorkey in "Under the Gas Light." This in time was followed by Athelwood, in the famous old English melodrama of the Eighth Henry
